

C.D. Howe Institute
Institut C.D. Howe

The C.D. Howe Institute Seeks a Policy Analyst

The C.D. Howe Institute, Canada's leading independent, non-partisan public policy research Institute, seeks a full-time healthcare policy analyst to join its research team. The position offers a unique opportunity to inform and influence debates over economic and social policy in Canada. It combines original research with coordination and review of work by outside experts, publishing, and presentation to policymakers, business people, academics, and the media. The position's working level will depend on the assets the candidate incumbent brings to the post. The ideal candidate will have:

- a postgraduate degree in economics or a field with a strong economics component;
- at least two to three years' work experience in the business, nonprofit, or public sectors;
- a solid grounding in health economics; empirical work with Canadian topics and statistics would be a definite asset;
- an active interest in Canadian policy issues, with some background in Canadian history, politics, public finance and governance;
- a portfolio of written work demonstrating ability to frame issues and offer analysis and advice;
- above-average ability to communicate, orally and in writing, to specialist and nonspecialist audiences; bilingualism would be an asset.

Salary and responsibilities will reflect training and experience. Interested candidates should forward their resume along with a covering letter to:

Personnel Manager,
C.D. Howe Institute,
300-67 Yonge Street, Toronto M5E 1J8
fax: (416) 865-1866
email: personnel@cdhowe.org

The C.D. Howe Institute thanks all candidates for their interest; however, only those selected for an interview will be contacted.