MESSAGE FROM THE CHAIRMAN

Hugh L. MacKinnon
Chair,
C.D. Howe Institute

The C.D. Howe Institute continues to distinguish itself with truly independent, evidence-driven analysis of the issues defining Canada's future. The relentless pursuit of dispassionate, quality work is unmatched. As a result, the Institute is a tour de force among Canada's top policy-making circles, able to work with senior decision makers of every political stripe.

As Chair of the Board, I help oversee the Institute's governance on behalf of its primary stakeholders – the individuals, associations, corporations, postsecondary institutions and foundations that give so generously to support our policy work.

As this report indicates, the Institute made an impressive range of contributions to Canadian public discourse in 2015, holding a record 73 policy events and publishing 66 research studies.

On behalf of the Board, I would like to thank the Institute's President & CEO, Bill Robson, for his stalwart leadership, and Duncan Munn, who ensures the Institute, despite being relatively underfunded compared to its competitors, continues to punch well above its weight. Thanks are also due to the outstanding research team, scholars and staff of the Institute for another terrific year of achievement.

It is my pleasure to acknowledge Dallas Howe, Steve Parker, Catherine Swift and Jonathan Tétrault who stepped down from the Board in 2015 and to thank them for their invaluable service. In 2015, we were delighted to welcome Brian Johnston, Heather Munroe-Blum and Ronald P. Mathison to the Board.

Finally, we pay tribute to Institute's members and friends. Your commitment to building a better Canada makes the Institute's work possible. Every charitable dollar enables our scholars to respond decisively to the most pressing issues facing Canada. Thank you.

Sincerely,
Hugh L. MacKinnon

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT & CEO

As the C.D. Howe Institute works to improve economic opportunities for Canadians through better public policy, the quality of the Institute's research, and association with eminent thinkers are vital assets. 2015 was an outstanding year on both fronts.

Fellow-In-Residence Kevin Milligan won the Doug Purvis Memorial Prize, widely considered the most prestigious award in Canadian economics, for his Institute publication "Tax Policy for a New Era: Promoting Economic Growth and Fairness." Since the inception of this award in 1994, Institute publications received it six times – powerful evidence of the high calibre of Canadians who contribute to our research.

During the year, we added significantly to our research team. We welcomed leading economist and policy analyst Craig Alexander, whose analytical abilities and wide expertise make him a tremendous asset. Jeremy Kronick joined us as a Senior Policy Analyst, providing extra capacity in the business cycle, monetary and financial services programs. Three new junior researchers also joined the team: Aaron Jacobs, Ramya Muthukumaran and Jennifer Tsao made immediate contributions in areas as diverse as healthcare, competition policy, human capital, international trade, fiscal policy, and urban issues.

As for our advisory groups, the Institute's National and Policy Councils continue to bring distinguished Canadians with diverse expertise together for high-level advice on the research program.

Our community of research fellows continued to grow. Notable additions include: Janet Davidson, former Deputy Minister of Alberta Health; Philip Howell, former CEO of the Financial Services Commission of Ontario; Warren Jestin, former SVP and Chief Economist at Scotiabank; Louis Lévesque, former Deputy Minister, Transport, Infrastructure and Communities, and International Trade; and John Murray, former Deputy Governor, Bank of Canada.

The Institute's ability to engage top talent was equally evident in our events program. Former Ontario Premiers Bob Rae and Ernie Eves, and former Ontario Finance Minister Greg Sorbara, helped us unpack opaque government budgets. And from Quebec Minister of Finance Carlos Leitaó and Montreal Mayor Denis Coderre, to Alberta Minister of Finance Joe Ceci and Alberta Energy Minister Margaret McCuaig-Boyd, leaders from every level of government and political persuasion across Canada engaged Institute members, and energized the Institute's research with rich discussion.

I am proud to acknowledge the contributions to the accomplishments documented in this Annual Report by so many eminent members of the Institute's community. I salute my colleagues, the Institute's Fellows, its board members, and the many leaders in business, government, academia and the professions who support our work. To them, and to our members, subscribers and donors, I extend my sincere gratitude. Thanks to you, the C.D. Howe Institute made further contributions to Canadian prosperity in 2015. We look forward to more success in 2016 and the years to come.

Sincerely,
William B.P. Robson

Institute reports undergo the industry's most rigorous peer-review process.

C.D. Howe Institute books, Commentaries and E-Briefs undergo a rigorous two-stage review by internal staff, and by outside academics and independent experts. The Institute publishes only studies that meets its standards for analytical soundness, factual accuracy and policy relevance. The Institute subjects its review and publication process to an annual audit by external experts.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENIOR VICE PRESIDENT & COO

Continued growth in memberships and donations enabled the Institute to further its investments in key strategic areas over the course of 2015. These increases in capacity allowed the Institute to accomplish a number of operational goals that enhance the impact of our policy work.

Here is how the Institute performed in meeting our core operational goals in 2015:

Duncan Munn
Senior VP and
Chief Operating Officer

Goal: Increase national and generational reach of the Institute's events program

Result:

We continued to build our events program across the country, hosting a record 73 events across four Canadian cities; Toronto, Calgary, Montreal, and Ottawa. This has increased the ability of members in these cities to participate in our unique off-the-record policy development dialogue.

2015 also saw the launch of our Health Partnership Series, a conference aimed at discussing, and exploring solutions to, the most pressing issues in Canadian healthcare. We also continued to grow our Entrepreneurs Debate Series, aimed at engaging the next generation of public policy leaders.

Goal: Launch new initiatives in key policy areas

Result:

This past year the Institute laid the groundwork for its new Human Capital Council, co-chaired by Kathleen Taylor and Neil Yeates, and is set to launch in mid-2016. In the months and years to come, it will focus on the numerous human capital issues facing Canadian policymakers.

Goal: Increase the Institute's outreach and media presence

Result:

2015 was a banner year for the Institute as it relates to communications. We continued to punch above our weight, as C.D. Howe was the most cited think tank in both the Globe and Mail, and National Post. We also continued to expand the Institute's national reach, as media citations grew by 62% across Canada in 2015.

2015 also saw the Institute launch its revamped website, and traffic to the website increased by 29% compared to 2014. Each of the Institute's social media channels saw over 100% increases in followers, as we continue to find new and innovative ways to engage senior decision makers, as well as the next generation of policymakers.

The goals that were achieved over the past year have advanced the Institute's research agenda and increased the effectiveness of our policy work. The new initiatives discussed in this report could not have taken place without strong and loyal member support, the involvement of policy leaders and scholars, and the hard work and expertise of my colleagues at the Institute. Thank you all, for helping us make a positive contribution to Canada's future through the development of essential policy intelligence.

Sincerely,
Duncan Munn

The Honourable Howard I. Wetston, former Chair and CEO of the Ontario Securities Commission

THE INSTITUTE'S 2015 RESEARCH MISSION

The Institute's research addresses four key policy challenges faced by Canadians and their governments: finding ways to generate stronger economic growth and prosperity; ensuring fiscal and financial stability; maximizing opportunities for individual Canadians; and enhancing the effectiveness of our economic and social policy institutions.

As the Institute sought to deepen our understanding of these challenges and of policy options to address them, its research output continued to grow. In 2015, this growth was notably the result of the Energy Policy program, supported by an engaged advisory Council. Papers published under the aegis of the program addressed very timely energy-related issues, including taxation, transportation, and social acceptance of energy projects.

Also of note, Institute's health policy research was in full bloom last year, with ten papers published containing practical recommendations on issues as timely as vaccination policy and access to needed drugs, and as timeless as the need to get better outcomes for Canadians for the money in health budgets.

The Institute's analytical depth in pensions, financial issues, tax policy and the effectiveness of public infrastructure spending also enabled it to address in a timely way economic issues that were top-of-mind for many Canadians, and to inform governments, at an early stage of decision-making, of important considerations and policy options regarding these files. Of note here is the work pertaining to the adequacy and sustainability of pensions and pension arrangements, risks in the housing market, the impact of high marginal tax rates, and the reduction of congestion.

The Institute's work on trade, innovation, competition and education, detailed in the next few pages, also contributed to a better understanding of how policies in these areas can best contribute to Canadians' well-being.

As exciting as these advances were, I was especially gratified by the addition to the C.D. Howe Institute's research team in 2015 of five individuals, ranging from established top-notch economic talent to promising recent graduates. Apart from bringing fresh insights and intellectual energy, they have enthusiastically embraced new ways of disseminating the research, working with the Institute's editing and communications team to ensure that research results are accessible to a wider audience and across more platforms than previously possible.

The Institute's research is strictly non-partisan. The Institute does not accept donations that are conditional on the work reaching a given conclusion or supporting a particular policy stance, or otherwise inhibiting its independence. Authors are required to disclose conflicts of interest, and papers are subjected to a best-in-class peer-review process, involving academics and practitioners, ensuring high standards of quality and relevance.

As a sure sign of continued relevance and quality, the Institute's 2014 Benefactors Lecture, "Tax Policy for a New Era," written and presented by University of British Columbia Professor Kevin Milligan, received in 2015 the Purvis Prize, one of the top accolades awarded for economic policy writing in Canada. This is the sixth time that the Institute has received this award, established in 1994.

In sum, I can say with confidence that in 2015 the Institute's research has expanded and deepened our understanding of key economic issues affecting Canadians' standards of living, and of the options available to address them. And that it remains of the highest quality and relevance to issues affecting Canadians' well-being.

The research team expresses its deep gratitude to members of the Councils that advise our research in many areas, to all Institute members for supporting and contributing to discussions informing the research program, and to Institute Fellows, authors and discussants that contribute so much to our policy work. The success of the Institute reflects, in the end, their willingness to share their deep knowledge, and their commitment to a stronger Canada.

Ensuring Fiscal and Financial Stability

Pensions, the housing market, and the general state of the economy and of government finances following the previous year's steep decline in oil prices, were on Canadians' minds in 2015. The Institute's research, discussions and recommendations informed the public debate in each case.

Again in 2015, the Institute addressed head-on the question of whether Canadians saved too little for their retirement, suggesting that worries in this respect are overplayed because workers save more than generally acknowledged, and savings adequacy thresholds can vary quite substantively according to individual preferences and life experiences. Institute research also addressed the sustainability of pensions and pension plans from various angles. One paper examined the role and prospects for single-employer target benefit plans, while another reviewed the historical lessons of intergenerational transfers embedded within the Quebec Pension Plan for other public plans. The Institute also updated its earlier research reminding Canadian policymakers that rules around the drawdown of Registered Retirement Income Funds currently force a growing number of Canadians to run the risk that they will outlive their savings.

At the confluence of pensions and fiscal sustainability, the Institute's annual assessment of the true unfunded liabilities of federal employee pension plans continued to raise alarms about their impact on the sustainability of public finances. This work, and the work on the sustainability of pension plans generally, was underpinned by another publication which provided a sobering assessment of the factors affecting long-run real investment returns – concluding that they would likely remain low in the long run.

More generally, limiting the incipient flow of red ink through federal employee cost containment, while judiciously redeploying resources and revisiting policies in support of economic growth, was the theme of the Institute's 2015 Shadow Federal Budget, in a year in which weak resource prices promised to exercise downward pressure on public revenues.

The Institute also contributed regular insights on macroeconomic policy through the regular discussions of its Monetary Policy Council, informing the current stance of Canadian monetary policy. As well, on the monetary front, the Institute produced research aimed at finding ways to better enable the Bank of Canada to meet its inflation target, by using an alternative short-term inflation indicator. At the intersection of monetary policy and financial stability, the Institute published work arguing for a new macro-prudential policy framework for Canada. Looking this time at the intersection of money and economic growth, another paper argued for a modernization of Canada's payment system, which would lead to the abolition of paper cheques.

The Institute also weighed in last year with insights and proposals on the risks posed by the state of the housing market and housing debt – another issue close to Canadians' pocketbooks and the preoccupations of policymakers. One paper looked in detail at the distribution of household mortgage debt and identified specific pockets of risk in Canada on that basis. Another paper explored the possibility of “backstop insurance” to deal with the risk to the economy of a housing market crash, while at the same time one study looked at ways of strengthening the efficiency of mortgage lending.

Generating Stronger Economic Growth and Prosperity

Businesses' confidence to invest underpins the expansion of Canadians' incomes and employment. Unfortunately, capital investment per worker in Canada has stalled recently, and remains below that in other advanced economies as the Institute's most recent annual "Tools for Workers" report showed. In that light, the Institute in 2015 sought to deepen our understanding of the competition, trade, investment and regulatory conditions within which Canadian businesses operate.

The Institute research made clear that governments are unable to systematically pick firms or sectors that will become growth leaders. Instead, governments can enhance the likelihood that these will emerge, by promoting vibrant competition and not hindering innovation. This is because of the "yeast and mushrooms" pattern to economic growth – a pattern which suggests that successful firms or sectors emerge in unpredictable ways from conditions supporting economic growth more generally.

Another "deep dive" paper looked carefully at the possibility that tax advantages available only to smaller businesses might discourage them from growing beyond that size. The authors did find such a "clustering" of Canadian businesses just below the size threshold at which such advantages disappear. This tax benefit of staying small does not stop all firms from growing past this threshold. However, support for small businesses results in an otherwise less efficient Canadian economy.

The Institute's research continued to highlight the negative impact of high marginal tax rates on investment and on work. The Institute's work in that vein included an empirical examination of the limiting impact on Canada's tax base of high marginal tax rates on higher incomes, and more generally how smart taxation can support higher incomes for all Canadians. The Institute also updated in 2015 its ground-breaking ranking of the business tax burden in Canada's major cities, and produced research detailing reforms to provincial royalty regimes that would spur resource development.

A study of the recent trade agreement between Canada and South Korea showed that Canada would gain in areas in which it has comparative advantages, such as agriculture and food, despite coming late to the table in that market. The Institute further pursued the comparative advantage theme in a study outlining the importance of removing international trade and investment barriers in financial services, an area of emerging strength for Canada. Institute research also uncovered ways to help smaller firms "learn by exporting." Canada can simplify how it applies some onerous international trade rules to smaller shipments.

The research also highlighted ways to simplify the Canadian rule book for inward foreign investment, and delved into ways that smarter regulation and pricing around rail transportation, urban congestion and waste recycling issues could support the economy. The Institute also examined how the government should be using evidence in challenging proposed mergers and the need for improved oversight of the Competition Bureau. Papers on the value of copyright in recorded music and a critical look at new proposed takeover rules by Canadian securities administrators rounded out a rich year of research on the conditions underpinning Canadian economic growth.

Fostering Opportunities for Individuals

A major component of the Institute's research consists in finding ways to improve opportunities for Canadians' personal and economic betterment. This question has informed in particular the work of Institute research published in 2015 on Education and Skills and on Healthcare.

The Institute's research on education evaluated the impact of the Pathways to Education program, concluding that such programs have a positive impact on high-school students' graduation and post-secondary enrollment rates. In another study, expanded school choice in BC was also seen to significantly improve students' outcomes. A third paper concluded that improving Canadian students' math scores required focusing on student fluency with key concepts known to lead to future math success.

A sobering study comparing teacher compensation and student outcomes in six Canadian provinces concluded that higher compensation for teachers does not translate into better educational outcomes. At the same time, the Institute also dug into the causes of Canada's disappointing performance in international rankings of adult literacy and numeracy skills. This research concluded that Canada's performance is explained by the high mix of recent immigrants in its population relative to that in other advanced economies, rather than suggesting systemic failings.

The Institute's work on health policy continued to alert provincial governments to the need to put healthcare on a more sustainable cost footing, given large unfunded health care liabilities. It also explored ways of improving incentives to spend public funds in ways that are better aligned with incentives to improve health outcomes for Canadians. Thus the Institute showed how the problem of medical specialists who can't find work in Canada is related to the way public health spending is allocated in silos.

Health policy research at the Institute continued to rely substantially on examining best practices in the many advanced countries that can boast of better accessibility and outcomes than the Canadian healthcare system. Indeed, the Institute's work also devoted a paper to the question of how to better measure and report on such health outcomes, as methodologies in that area quickly becoming more patient-centric.

The Institute also reflected on the role that information technology can play in reducing costs and increasing accessibility and quality of services. In addition, Institute research led to specific recommendations on ways governments could encourage parents to have their children vaccinated in order to reach acceptable vaccination coverage targets. And it continued to propose cost-effective ways to enhance accessibility to services and to necessary medication, particularly for lower-income Canadians, by thinking through how to make pharmacare feasible in the federation, building up from existing provincial programs.

Enhancing the Effectiveness of our Institutions

The Institute's research program addresses the overarching question of the efficiency and good governance of the institutions at the centre of Canadian economic and social policy-making. In this vein, the Institute's work in 2015 focused on the accountability and transparency of financial reporting of various levels of governments, on intergovernmental fiscal relations, and on the approval process for large projects spanning multiple jurisdictions.

The Institute's annual report on the fiscal accountability of Canada's federal and provincial governments made waves once again. As well, the Institute once again urged municipalities in Canada to make their financial reporting more transparent, such as by using accrual accounting for capital expenditures. The thorough work and strong reputation that the Institute has built in both these areas led a number of governments to take the Institute's recommendations to heart, thus making Canadians better able to understand the implication of decisions taken by their representatives.

The Institute also weighed in on prominent issue related to First Nations governance, particularly in the context of natural resource and other economic development. One paper concluded that modern treaties had a positive effect on the incomes of First Nations that had signed them, as they provided a clearer governance framework for beneficial economic development. Another paper warned, however, that First Nations with higher own-source revenues did not automatically spend this income on education and housing – and that these plainly remained the responsibility of the federal government.

Another study examined ways to promote shared interests between First Nations, other levels of government across the country and investors in resource and infrastructure projects promising wider economic benefits for Canada. The study provided a guide, based on best practices, for enhancing the probabilities of mutually beneficial agreements.

Last but not least, the Institute's researchers delved deeply into federal-provincial fiscal relations with a major study aimed at informing senior governments ahead of negotiations on future fiscal transfers from Ottawa to the provinces. The study reviewed the history and theory behind such transfers, and emphasized that not only needs, but accountability of each level of government to citizens, needed to inform future transfer levels.

2015 MAJOR GIFTS AND GRANTS

As a charity, private support makes the C.D. Howe Institute's work possible. People are often surprised by our modest resources. We have only one office, and about 30 staff. We have no eight-figure endowments or major, multi-year government grants. All donations are purely philanthropic – the Institute does not accept any donations that stipulate a predetermined result or otherwise inhibit the independence of its staff and authors.

Targeted major gifts and event sponsorships enable supporters to bolster the Institute's research and dissemination capacities in specific areas of interest. They complement the annual membership campaign, strengthening the Institute and enabling it to recruit scholars and support programs that enhance its ability to develop innovative solutions to policy challenges. We gratefully acknowledge the following donors and sponsors:

INDEPENDENT AUDITOR'S REPORT

TO THE MEMBERS OF C.D. HOWE INSTITUTE

We have audited the accompanying financial statements of the C.D. Howe Institute, which comprise the balance sheet as at December 31, 2015, the statements of revenue and expenses, changes in fund balances and cash flows for the year then ended, and a summary of significant accounting policies and other explanatory information.

Management's Responsibility for the Financial Statements

Management is responsible for the preparation and fair presentation of these financial statements in accordance with Canadian accounting standards for not-for-profit organizations, and for such internal control as management determines is necessary to enable the preparation of financial statements that are free from material misstatement, whether due to fraud or error.

Auditor's Responsibility

Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these financial statements based on our audit. We conducted our audit in accordance with Canadian generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that we comply with ethical requirements and plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free from material misstatement.

An audit involves performing procedures to obtain audit evidence about the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. The procedures selected depend on the auditor's judgment, including the assessment of the risks of material misstatement of the financial statements, whether due to fraud or error. In making those risk assessments, the auditor considers internal control relevant to the entity's preparation and fair presentation of the financial statements in order to design audit procedures that are appropriate in the circumstances, but not for the purpose of expressing an opinion on the effectiveness of the entity's internal control. An audit also includes evaluating the appropriateness of accounting policies used and the reasonableness of accounting estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall presentation of the financial statements.

We believe that the audit evidence we have obtained is sufficient and appropriate to provide a basis for our audit opinion.

Opinion

In our opinion, the financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the C.D. Howe Institute as at December 31, 2015 and the results of its operations and its cash flows for the year then ended in accordance with Canadian accounting standards for not-for-profit organizations.

1. Description of organization

The C.D. Howe Institute (the “Institute”) is an independent, not-for-profit, research and educational organization. It carries out independent analysis and critique of public policy issues and translates scholarly research for action by the government and the private sector. The Institute is a registered charity exempt from paying income taxes under Section 149(1) (f) of the Income Tax Act. The Institute was incorporated under Part II of the Canada Business Corporations Act on April 23, 1958 and was continued under the Canada Not-for-Profit Corporations Act on June 6, 2014.

2. Summary of significant accounting policies

The financial statements of the Institute have been prepared in accordance with Canadian accounting standards for not-for-profit organizations published by the Chartered Professional Accountants of Canada using the deferral method and reflect the following significant accounting policies:

Contributions

Contributions are recorded as received, except when specified by the donor that they relate to the following year(s), in which case they are deferred until eligible expenses are incurred. Contributions of materials and services used in the normal course of the Institute’s operations are recorded at their fair value when the amounts can be reasonably estimated. Endowment contributions are recognized as direct increases in the Fund balance. Transfers from the Endowment Fund to the Operating Fund are recognized when the transfer is authorized by the Endower.

Financial instruments

Financial assets and financial liabilities are initially recognized at fair value when the Institute becomes a party to the contractual provision of the financial instrument. Subsequently, all financial instruments are measured at amortized cost, except for investments. The Institute has elected to use the fair value option to measure investments, with any subsequent changes in fair value recorded in the Statement of revenue and expenses.

Financial assets measured at amortized cost are assessed at each reporting date for indications of impairment. If such impairment exists, the asset is written down and the resulting impairment loss is recognized in the Statement of revenue and expenses.

Cash and cash equivalents

Cash and cash equivalents are defined as cash, interest bearing deposits that are redeemable on demand, and Canadian securities with original maturity dates of three months or less.

Short-term investments

Short-term investments are accounted for on the settlement date basis and any transaction costs are expensed as incurred.

Capital assets

Capital asset additions are recorded at cost. Amortization is calculated using the straight-line basis at 33-1/3% per annum for electronic equipment, and computer hardware and software and 10% per annum for furniture, fixtures and equipment. Conference equipment is amortized on the straight-line basis over six years. Signage and leasehold improvements are amortized on the straight-line basis over the term of the lease.

2. Summary of significant accounting policies (continued)

Publications

Publications are not recorded as inventory. Costs are accrued for publications in progress. All costs of publications that have entered the production stage by the end of the year are expensed.

Deferred capital contributions

Deferred capital contributions relate to funds received for office leasehold improvements and are amortized on the straight-line basis over the term of lease.

Deferred rent

Deferred rent, consisting of tenant allowances, free rent and reduced rent, is amortized on the straight-line basis over the term of the lease.

Measurement uncertainty

The preparation of financial statements in conformity with Canadian accounting standards for not-for-profit organizations requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect amounts reported therein. Areas which involve a significant degree of estimation include the valuation of short-term investments, accounts payable and accrued liabilities, deferred revenue and the useful life of capital assets. Actual results may differ from such estimates.

Description of funds

Operating Fund

Amounts received, used or held for the research and educational goals of the Institute, are recorded in the Operating Fund.

Endowment Fund

Endowment Funds represent amounts received which are externally endowed, together with any designated unspent investment income.

Invested in Capital Assets Fund

The Invested in Capital Assets Fund records the Institute's cost of capital assets, less accumulated amortization and unamortized deferred capital contributions.

8. Endowment Funds (continued)

The Roger Phillips Endowment Fund was established to advance social policy dialogue. The capital is to be invested and the investment income earned is available to fulfill the purpose of the endowment.

The Jack Mintz Endowment Fund was established to support an annual visit and economic seminar by an eminent expert. The capital is to be invested and the investment income is available to fulfill the purpose of the endowment.

The Special Studies Endowment Fund was established to support special projects which would otherwise be difficult to fund through annual membership contributions. The capital is to be invested and the investment income earned is being retained in the Fund to fulfill the purpose of the endowment.

The Sylvia Ostry Endowment Fund was established to stage an annual lecture in Sylvia Ostry's name, featuring a distinguished speaker on a topic related to international economic policy. The capital is to be invested and the investment income earned is available to fulfill the purpose of the endowment.

The Monetary Policy Endowment Fund was established during 2009 to support research, publications and events resulting in further understanding of, and offer policy advice on, Canadian Monetary policy. During the year, further contributions of $50,000 (2014 – $165,000) were received. The capital is to be invested and the investment income earned is being retained in the Fund to fulfill the purpose of the endowment.

During the year, in accordance with the wishes of the Endowers, $214,520 (2014 – $256,874) was transferred to deferred revenue for the purpose of funding future activities over the fiscal years 2016 to 2018.

The Endowment Funds have been invested in long-term investments (Note 4).

9. Pension plan

The Institute sponsors a group registered retirement savings plan for its employees. The Institute's liability is limited to matching contributions for the year and these amounted to $87,675 (2014 – $73,286).

The Institute sponsors a registered pension plan and contributions for the year amounted to $35,457 (2014 – $43,062).

10. Guarantees

In the normal course of business, the Institute enters into agreements that meet the definition of a guarantee. The Institute's primary guarantees are as follows:

- (a) The Institute has provided indemnities under a lease agreement for the use of operating facilities. Under the terms of the agreement, the Institute agrees to indemnify the counterparties for various items including, but not limited to, all liabilities, loss, suits, and damages arising during, on or after the term of the agreement. The maximum amount of any potential future payment cannot be reasonably estimated.
- (b) Indemnity has been provided to all directors and/or officers of the Institute for various items including, but not limited to, all costs to settle suits or actions due to involvement with the Institute, subject to certain restrictions. The Institute has purchased directors' and officers' liability insurance to mitigate the cost of any potential future suits or actions. The term of the indemnification is not explicitly defined, but is limited to the period over which the indemnified party served as a trustee, director or officer of the Institute. The maximum amount of any future payment cannot be reasonably estimated.
- (c) In the normal course of business, the Institute has entered into agreements that include indemnities in favour of third parties, such as confidentiality agreements, engagement letters with advisors and consultants, outsourcing agreements, leasing contracts, information technology agreements and service agreements. These indemnification agreements may require the Institute to compensate counterparties for losses incurred by the counterparties as a result of breaches in representation and regulations or as a result of litigation claims or statutory sanctions that may be suffered by the counterparties as a consequence of the transaction. The terms of these indemnities are not explicitly defined and the maximum amount of any potential reimbursement cannot be reasonably estimated.

The nature of these indemnification agreements prevents the Institute from making a reasonable estimate of the maximum exposure due to the difficulties in assessing the amount of liability, which stems from the unpredictability of future events and the unlimited coverage offered to counterparties. Historically, the Institute has not made any significant payments under such or similar indemnification agreements and therefore no amount has been accrued in the financial statement, with respect to these agreements.

11. Risk management

The Institute follows a Statement of Investment Policies, which provides the investment objectives, performance expectations and guidelines for the management of its investments.

Market risk

Market risk is the risk that the value of an investment will fluctuate as a result of changes in market prices, whether those changes are caused by factors specific to the specific individual investment or factors affecting all securities traded in the market. To mitigate this specific risk, the Institute invests in a diversified portfolio of investments in accordance with the Institute's investment policy.

Interest rate risk

The Institute is exposed to interest rate risk with respect to its long-term investments. Changes in the prime interest rate will have a positive or negative impact on the Institute's interest income. Such exposure will increase accordingly should the Institute maintain higher levels of long-term investments in the future.

Credit risk

Credit risk is the risk that one party to a financial instrument will fail to discharge an obligation and cause the other party to incur financial loss. The Institute's investment policy defines permitted investments and provides guidelines and restrictions on acceptable investments, which minimizes credit risk.

Foreign exchange risk

Foreign exchange risk is the risk that the fair value of future cash flows of a financial instrument will fluctuate because of changes in foreign exchange rates. The Institute invests in non-Canadian equities and is therefore directly exposed to currency risk, as the value of equities denominated in other currencies will fluctuate due to changes in exchange rates.

12. Comparative amounts

The following 2014 amounts have been restated to conform with the current year's financial statement presentation:
